*Very Strange Bedfellows:
The Short and Unhappy Marriage of Richard Nixon and Spiro Agnew*

Jules Witcover has covered Washington and the political scene for more than half a century as a newspaper reporter and columnist, author of a dozen books on American politics and history and co-author five others. He has covered every presidential convention and campaign since 1960 and has written books about every presidential campaign since 1968.

His political column is syndicated nationally by (Chicago) Tribune Media Services. He has reported from Washington for the Newhouse Newspapers, the Los Angeles Times, the Washington Post, the Washington Star and the Baltimore Sun.

He is a U.S. Navy veteran and a graduate of Columbia College and the Columbia Graduate School of Journalism.

He lives with his wife in Washington, DC, and has four children and two grandchildren.

His latest book is "Very Strange Bedfellows: The Short and Unhappy Marriage of Richard Nixon and Spiro Agnew," published by Public Affairs Press.
